

Maintain Momentum Initiative Supports AAC&U, NCAN, Yes We Must

Ascendium has made its second round of grants in the $10 million Maintain Momentum for Student Success Initiative, with a goal to sustain reform work and prevent equity gaps from widening amid the historic challenges posed by the COVID-19 pandemic. The Association of American Colleges & Universities, National College Attainment Network and the Yes We Must Coalition will share nearly $1.5 million in funding, adding to the first round of $3.1 million in funding.

The Maintain Momentum for Student Success Initiative allows networks and membership organizations leading the student success movement to offer discounted dues to their member organizations. It also allows them to adapt their services and offerings to remote and online delivery, even as they continue championing such reforms as data-informed decision-making, guided pathways reform and leadership development. ### Education Writers Association, Ed Trust Launch Fellowship Programs

We're pleased to share the following new opportunities with our network, and we hope you'll share with yours. The Education Writers Association (EWA) is looking for its next class of Reporting Fellows. The fellowships provide financial awards to journalists to fuel enterprising news coverage of education. This will be the 11th class of EWA Reporting Fellows and in this round, supported in part by grants from Ascendium and other funders, EWA is inviting proposals on a variety of timely and important topics focused on education after high school. Find more information and apply here.

The second of two new Fellows opportunities comes from national nonprofit Ed Trust, which works through research, policy analysis and advocacy to close opportunity gaps that disproportionately affect students of color and learners from low-income backgrounds. With support from Ascendium, Ed Trust launched a fellowship program and is inviting six formerly incarcerated or justice-impacted individuals to serve as Justice Fellows for its inaugural cohort. Justice Fellows will be writing op-eds, presenting at Ed Trust convenings, reviewing and co-authoring publications, providing interviews, providing technical assistance, and attending monthly professional development meetings (find detailed information here).

How-to Guide will Benefit Community College Leaders and Stakeholders

Even before COVID-19, community colleges were in the spotlight, with continued, and now even increased, pressure to become engines of local workforce development. However, developing partnerships between community colleges and workforce entities, especially in rural areas, can be challenging, with leaders unsure on how to engage and sustain those partnerships over time. A recently released "how-to" guide has been developed for rural community college leaders to aid in building and refining those workforce partnerships.

Social Finance, a nonprofit dedicated to mobilizing social capital to drive social projects, has released a report titled "Improving Workforce Outcomes for Rural Community College Students: A How-To-Guide for Rural Community College Workforce Partnerships." Profiling the successes of eight diverse rural community colleges, the report provides best practices rooted in success, considerations for factors facing rural communities and a call to action for increased focus on collaboration. We believe that rural community college leaders will find the key steps and considerations listed in the report helpful in improving existing partnerships or engaging new partners.

This project, funded by a $180,000 Ascendium grant, aligns with investment priorities in our Support Rural Postsecondary Education and Workforce Training focus area to not only better understand rural postsecondary providers and build their capacity to support rural learners, but to also encourage partnerships and collaboration that increase high-quality postsecondary opportunities and pathways to employment for rural learners.
